

PRESIDENT'S CORNER

When was the last time you were lost in a moment?

It is often difficult to recognize that moment until you've had some time to look back and appreciate it. When you do have the chance to recall that moment, it's important to remember what exactly made you feel that way. My moments are often found when I'm out in nature or having a unique experience with someone. Everything else disappears and there is a moment of clarity when you realize that nothing else matters. The fears and uncertainty of life dissolve. Some of my moments include saying, "I do" to my wife; the first time I held my son; when I lie in the park staring at the sky. In every one of these instances, I remember thinking to myself, how can life be so good?

Last week when I pulled up to a drive-thru window and was waiting for the nice cashier to take my money, I had one of these great experiences. The cashier chirped, "The people ahead of you paid it forward," as she passed my food through the window.

Confused, I looked ahead for the car—it could have been the mud-splashed truck, the Mercedes, or the minivan—which at this point was headed toward the highway. This happened to me at a time when I was very stressed with what was going on in my life. The cashier giggled, "Sir, you can take your food." I was disoriented. I felt touched. I was lost in a moment. It was in that moment that made me think about how I live my life. Am I a giver? Do I receive often? Am I the example that I want my son to follow? Am I the guy that puts a tear in my wife's eye because of who I aspire to be?

Pay it forward is a trend that is happening everywhere. It's just as likely that the preceding car will pick up your tab at a Dunkin' Donuts drive-through in Detroit or a McDonald's drive-through in Fargo. These acts of generosity are taking place at a time when the nation's legislators can't seem to speak a civil word unless reading from Dr. Seuss. The director of hospitality at Chick-fil-A, Mark Moraitakis, said, "We really don't know why it's happening but if I had to guess, I'd say there is just a lot of stuff going on in the country that people find discouraging, paying it forward is a way to counteract that." I agree with him.

The anonymity of the drive-through is what makes it especially easy to pay it forward because it dispenses with any awkwardness and suspicion about motives. You can pull away before the next car pulls up and discovers the gift that is impossible to refuse. Kindness stems from feeling blessed and wanting to share good fortune. I was told by the cashier that most want to pay it forward in gratitude to drivers who waved their car ahead of them in line or after noticing in their rearview mirror someone who was visibly upset, and they wanted to offer them a reason to smile.

What's Up in the Neighborhood

2305 Edwin Street

The Yard of the Month for May is the home of Jim and Amy Pannell. The Pannells have lived at their home since 2001. Jim is a financial advisor with Edward Jones and Amy is the founder of a non-profit organization that teaches English as a second language to students in countries across the world. They have two children; Grant and L.G. Grant is a senior at Paschal High School and will be attending Baylor this fall. L.G. is a student at McLean Middle School.

The yard has a very warm and inviting feel that nicely compliments the colonial-style home. Features of the well-maintained yard include triple ball topiaries, begonias, and beautiful oak trees.

The Yard of the Month

Walking in Mistletoe Heights

One of the benefits of our neighborhood is that it is a wonderful place to go for a walk. Whether walking for exercise, taking the baby for a stroll, walking the dog, or just walking to look around and enjoy the sights, we are fortunate to live in an area that is both safe and aesthetically pleasing.

A problem sometimes occurs, however, when shrubs are allowed to grow out over the sidewalk—making it difficult if not impossible to stay on the sidewalk. The same thing occurs when trees in the parkways have limbs that are so low that a person must duck down to avoid being smacked by a branch.

Often this overgrowth is on the side of a lot, or perhaps in the back of a lot, and it simply goes unseen—out of sight, out of mind, so to speak. I know that each and every resident of Mistletoe Heights wants this community to be its best. Having lived here since 1987, my wife and I know very well what a special group of people live here!

It behooves us all to be mindful of how our landscapes impact our friends and neighbors as they use the public sidewalks.

Email Guidelines

A friendly reminder of the guidelines for the neighborhood email list serve:

What:

MH Email Distribution List guidelines for the email address: residents@mistletoeheights.org

Purpose:

The email distribution list is used for announcements, emergencies, lost pets, threats to life and limb, criminal activity, etc. It may also be used for thoughtful, civil and respectful discussion of issues vital to the neighborhood.

Moderator:

The email list is not direct delivery, but rather has one or more moderators. The moderators review each incoming e-mail and release the e-mail to the list according to the below set of guidelines.

Replies:

When reply-all is used, the reply will be sent to the whole list (through a moderator). When an individual reply to the sender is used (not a reply-all), the reply is sent to the individual sender only and is not sent to the whole list, and is not seen by the moderators. (Note that this is different from the way the previous info@mistletoeheights.org e-mail system worked.)

Email Guidelines:

- No political messages
- No religious messages
- No commercial messages (and that includes stuff for sale, houses, etc). The only thing allowed is sales hosted by charitable organizations, schools, garage sales and the occasional "I'm moving out of MH & I need to sell my stuff so I'm selling it cheap".
- No negative messages about neighbors, no attacks on neighbors
- Discussion on neighborhood issues should be thoughtful, civil, and respectful. Each email should have a purpose in improving our neighborhood and moving a discussion forward, not in just "piling on" to a point that has already been made. It should not be used for "venting" frustration in the absence of a positive contribution to an issue.
- The moderator can ask a submitter to reword a message to make it acceptable
- When responding to an individual's request (such as a recommendation for a painter, plumber, etc), respond directly to the requestor. After the requestor has received the responses, they may then send a note back to the list summarizing the responses in a single e-mail, so all may benefit.
- Members may be removed for consistent violation of the above guidelines
- The moderator has the final say on what is sent out. These are only guidelines. The moderators may use their own judgment in occasionally stepping outside the guidelines should they consider it in the best interest of the neighborhood.
- The moderators may adjust these guidelines over time to improve the list's benefit to the neighborhood and we ask for our neighbor's patience as we do so. Comments may be sent to moderator@mistletoeheights.org.

My feel-good moment was planting herbs last Sunday in absolutely perfect gardening weather, after the storm had passed. My next-door neighbor Amanda was clearing out and replanting one of her beds, too, and my dog Gracie and her cat Tiger sat around and supervised as we worked. (They were encouraged to help, but somehow never did, despite proven digging skills.) Not a single mosquito disturbed us. I planted peppermint, Munstead lavender, rosemary, and elfin thyme from Elizabeth Anna's. What could be better than elfin thyme?

—Heather White

In 2010, my son Michael's first year of college was complete, and he was home looking for work. Jobs were scarce then, so he and his buddies created a lawn mowing company, made business cards, and went knocking door to door soliciting their work. This was not just another lawn mowing company. In addition to mowing, these guys would care for your yard if you didn't have a regular service and were going out of town and needed it tended to while you were gone.

The guys knocked on our neighbor's door, Scott Nishamura. Scott did a really kind and helpful thing by taking a photo of the boys, wrote an article, and put it in the Star-Telegram. It made the front page of the business section on June 20, 2010. It's a great article: <http://blogs.star-telegram.com/dfwjobs/2010/06/index.html>

You all are probably looking for pics and art by younger children, but I'm going ahead (too proudly) and sending a photo of my daughter and her latest painting. Even at 20, I will always remember her as student of Sweet Lily B; she graduated from Paschal, and, as a junior, studies at Trinity University. This spring, she is taking 17 hours in Paris. The photograph is of her painting a portrait reproduction with special permission by the Louvre.

She'll be home over the summer, and she does portraits and other paintings by commission, too!

Every year from the age of eight, I spent July at Kids Who Care Musical Theatre Camp. I loved everything about the experience of putting on a show with 200 other kids, and learned invaluable lessons about being a leader, a professional, and a good human being. But what I think made the biggest impact on me and my family was opening our home to exchange students who were attending the camp. Of course there are awkward and nervous feelings all around when they first arrive, but after a few days it starts to feel like they've always been a part of your home. These kids may have come from Italy, Germany, Indonesia, or Israel, but it soon becomes obvious that kids are just kids no matter where they grow up!

We always had two or three of them, ranging in age from 14 to 18, sleeping in our guest room, sharing my room, or just camping out in the living room, and every year was a unique, wonderful experience. There were big group activities to show them around town, and simple family dinners at our kitchen table. As a young kid who's an only child, I just felt incredibly cool having these teenage siblings to hang around with! I learned so much about life in other countries and enjoyed being able to teach them about my own. As I grew to be the same age as the kids who came, they became permanent good friends who still enrich my life. My parents grew close to them as well, and last year when a girl who stayed with us 15 years ago came back as a chaperone, they were thrilled to have her stay at their house again.

The scene at the airport as the kids return home is always a mess of hugs and tears and contact information exchange. There are endless words of thanks from kids who have been forever changed by the kindness we've shown them. But receiving this gratitude feels completely unnecessary. We gave them a place to call home here in Texas, but they gave us the far greater gift of making the world feel like a smaller and sweeter place. Plus, having friends to stay with when I make it to Italy sure doesn't hurt!

Join Botanical Research Institute of Texas (BRIT) scientists and botanists at the BRIT campus, 1700 University Drive in the heart of the Fort Worth Cultural District, for Prairie Day on Saturday, May 3, from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. This is BRIT's free, annual, outdoor celebration highlighting the beauty and vibrancy of the North Texas native landscape with family-oriented, hands-on activities, events, demonstrations, and entertainment that showcase the native grasses, wildflowers, and vegetation that blankets the BRIT campus.

A tradition begun in its first year during Prairie Day is the making of seedballs to help populate the BRIT campus's side meadow with a variety of native plants. A Native American tradition, seed balls are tiny modules containing all the ingredients to give seeds an extra hand up in getting started – seeds, humus, dried powdered red clay, and sand. When mixed with water and rolled into balls, they become little gardens that are tossed into areas that need vegetation. They will lay dormant until the right amount of rain falls. Exhibits, demonstrations, and live entertainment will be provided.
